The House of the Seven Gables is a classic Gothic novel by American author Nathaniel Hawthorne, first published in 1851 by Ticknor and Fields. With the eponymous New England mansion serving as the novel's centerpiece, the story charts the fortunes and misfortunes of the Pyncheon family as they navigate complex emotional terrain such as guilt and forgiveness, the meaning of home, and the sometimes-thin line between the physical world and the supernatural.

The House of the Seven Gables Summary | SuperSummary

The House of the Seven Gables, antique as it now looks, was not the first habitation erected by civilized man on precisely the same spot of ground. Pyncheon Street formerly bore the humbler appellation of Maule's Lane, from the name of the original occupant of the soil, before whose cottage-door it was a cow-path.

Clifford describes a "hypothetical" house, with seven gables, where a dead man sits in the parlor. He says, "I could never flourish there, nor be happy," and claims it would be a relief if this house were torn down or destroyed. He hopes for a more "nomadic" future, where houses are out of daily use.
